Introduction . . . . .	9
Early and late modernity: compositions of thought and action . . . . .	9
Transitional phase positions. . . . .	13
Early and late modernity: metaphors that shape the understanding of knowledge . . . . .	15
Continuity between metaphorical expression and literal description. . . . .	17
Shortcomings of the traditional conception of tacit knowledge . . . . .	18
Chapter structure and content . . . . .	21
 First Chapter
Philosophical foundations of research in tacit knowledge: knowledge, figurative language and metaphor . . . . .	24
1.1 Summary of the first chapter . . . . .	24
1.2 Methodology of the theoretical chapter: ideal type and compositions of thought and action . . . . .	32
1.3 Knowledge and the role of figurative language in its explication . . . . .	36
1.3.1 Knowledge as information . . . . .	36
1.3.2 Knowledge as learning from intersubjective negotiation and sharing of knowledge structure . . . . .	41
1.3.3 Knowledge as the unifying of a knowledge field and tacit knowledge . . . . .	47
1.3.4 Figurative language and metaphor: their role in the explication process of intuition . . . . .	69
1.3.5 Metaphorisation, phenomenological analysis and development of the metaphorical landscape . . . . .	94
1.4 Coda of chapter one . . . . .	104
 Second Chapter
Metaphor, Embodiment and Tacit Learning. . . . . .	106
2.1 What do we mean by embodied? . . . . .	106
2.2 What are embodied metaphors? . . . . .	106
2.3 Language: Metaphors embody the abstract in the physical domain. . . . .	107
2.4 Psychology: Mental metaphors have form . . . . .	108
2.5 Physiology: The body can be a metaphor . . . . .	109
2.6 Material: Metaphors can be physicalised. . . . .	109
2.7 What difference does it make that metaphor is embodied? . . . . .	110
2.7.1 Linguistic embodiment . . . . .	110
2.7.2 Psychological embodiment. . . . .	111
2.7.3 Physiological embodiment . . . . .	112
2.7.4 Material embodiment. . . . .	112
2.8 Relationship to tacit learning . . . . .	113

Third Chapter
Clean Language Interviewing Making qualitative research interviews verifiable.	115
3.1 Interviewee biases.	115
3.2 Interviewer priming	116
3.3 Why are interviewer-introduced metaphors so important?	117
3.4 Clean Language	118
3.5 Need for a 'cleanness' rating	118
3.6 Other features of Clean Language interviewing.	120
3.6.1 Researching metaphors and mental models	120
3.6.2 Gather in-depth data	121
3.7 Tacit knowledge research	121
Fourth Chapter
Research Methodology	123
4.1 Rudimentary Definition Elements of Tacit Knowledge	123
4.2 Research Participants and Criteria for their Selection	125
4.3 The Process of Acquiring Data	126
4.4 Methods of Data Collection	128
Fifth Chapter
Clean Language as a data collection tool.	130
5.1 Conducting interviews using Clean Language.	130
5.2 Analysis of conducting research interviews	133
5.3 Phases in the analysis.	134
5.4 Qualitative analysis.	135
5.4.1 Categorization of questions	135
5.4.2 Discussion on the categorization of questions	139
5.4.3 Categorization of comments	140
5.4.4 Discussion of the categorization of comments	143
5.5 Quantitative analysis	143
5.5.1 Discussion of the quantitative analysis	146
5.6 Conclusion	146
Sixth Chapter
Tacit knowledge of student teachers and teachers from a research perspective: An overview study.	148
6.1 Towards a definition of tacit knowledge	148
6.2 Reviewing aims and methodology	151
6.3 Results of the review	152
6.3.1 How is tacit knowledge and practical knowledge conceptualized?.	152

6.3.2	What aims or research questions guide the authors of these studies? . . . .	153
6.3.3	What research methods do the authors apply and what research samples do they use? . . . . .	153
6.3.4	What are the conclusions of the research studies? . . . . .	153
6.4	Discussion and conclusions . . . . .	155

Seventh Chapter

Metaphorization in the process of making tacit knowledge explicit . . . . . 160

7.1	The content of tacit knowledge made explicit . . . . .	160
7.2	Evidence of making tacit knowledge explicit . . . . .	162
7.3	Interaction between metaphorization-literalization and backward metaphorization in the process of making tacit knowledge explicit. . . . .	164
7.4	Conclusion . . . . .	166

Eighth Chapter

The conception of teaching in student teachers: Common topics and individual challenges . . . . . 168

8.1	Teacher's/student's conception of teaching. . . . .	169
8.2	Sources and data analysis . . . . .	170
8.3	Results of the analysis . . . . .	171
8.3.1	Concept of pupils . . . . .	171
8.3.2	Motivation as a common topic. . . . .	176
8.3.3	Individual challenges . . . . .	178
8.4	Discussion and conclusions . . . . .	184

Ninth Chapter

Unexpected Situations During Student Teacher Practice . . . . . 186

9.1	A preliminary definition: From an episodic situation to an unexpected situation. . . . .	187
9.2	What happens in the mind during an unexpected situation? . . . . .	189
9.3	Methodology . . . . .	191
9.4	Types of unexpected situations . . . . .	193
9.4.1	Unpleasant unexpected situations affecting more people . . . . .	194
9.4.2	Unpleasant unexpected situations that affect only the student . . . . .	200
9.4.3	Pleasant unexpected situations. . . . .	200
9.5	Discussion of the typology of unexpected situations . . . . .	202
9.6	Dealing with unexpected situations. . . . .	203
9.7	Circumstances for the emergence of unexpected situations . . . . .	204
9.8	Immediate reactions to unexpected situations. . . . .	205
9.9	Strategies for dealing with unexpected situations . . . . .	208

9.10 Discussion on dealing with unexpected situation strategies . . . . .	212
9.11 Conclusion . . . . .	213
Tenth Chapter
Forming Tacit Knowledge—A student teacher during teaching practice. . . . . .	215
10.1 Research goals and design. . . . .	216
10.2 Research results . . . . .	217
10.2.1 Jaroslava’s conception of teaching in the process of forming her TK. . . . .	217
10.2.2 Forming TK by addressing unexpected situations in communication with pupils . . . . .	219
10.2.3 Didactic situations reflected by the student as the source of her TK . . . . .	221
10.2.4 Uncovering elements of TK through stimulated recall . . . . .	225
10.3 Conclusion . . . . .	228
Eleventh Chapter
Sharing Tacit Knowledge—Student Teacher and Teacher Trainer . . . . .	231
11.1 Traineeship as a Way of Sharing Tacit Knowledge . . . . .	232
11.2 Cornerstones of the research . . . . .	234
11.3 Research Methodology . . . . .	235
11.4 Research Results . . . . .	236
11.5 Outcome Summary and Conclusion. . . . .	241
Conclusion . . . . .	245
